In 1857 General Heintzleman gave the Yumas a severe whipping. They Tontos were the "connecting links' the Yumas and Mojaves on the west. General Crook, who had experience in previous Indian wars, having been in command of the Pitt river expedi tion in 1857, believed in "fighting the devil with fire." He accordingly organized companies of Yuma scouts armed and equipped as U. S. soldiers, and officered by able white men, known as "chiefs of scouts." By this means sevaral Apache tribes severely whipped, and as proof of the sincerity of their surrender sent Crook the heads of thirteen of their princi pal chiefs, as per his request.

Crook's method of fighting struck terror to the hearts of the Apaches He came not with white soldiers, un used to the deserts and guerilla warfare, but with thoir ancient enemies, the Yumas, who could always travel as far and fight as well, and were as cunning as the Apaches themselves and who, when well supported at the fatigues of warfare the more. Crook pushed his campaign vigorously. His spies penetrated to the very councils of the hostile tribes, and before they knew it he would come upon them unsupplied and prepared for long sieges either in travel or battle, and gave no quarter. His cunning and vigor in warfage aroused the fear of the Apaches, as well as their admiration and won for him the name of Be-dah klee zhay- Klee-cah-yay, or the Gray Fox. The Apaches take their tribal names from the localities where they ranged before being placed on the reservation. Hence came the Pinal, Aravaipa, Tonto, Sierra Blanca (White Mountain), Mescalero, Warm Springs, San Carlos, Chiricahua, etc. In 1875 the Yumas, Mojaves and agency, in the White Mountain reservation. About this time the Aravaipa tribe of the Apaches, under their chief. Es-kim-in-zin, tired of war, after having been thoroughly whipped by the Gray Fox, settled on the San Pedro river, and went to farming, and have become quite wealthy.

Their fear left. They became uneasy and restless under the frauds of Indian agents, and left and returned

Under our system of doing business nothing can be saved, and what would seem as wreck and ruin prices are prices that we can hame unabashed to our customers. It is true that the public has no idea of the risks we take in buying as space would admit to our main salesroom. There are yet many unopened bankrupt stocks. We buy them, so to speak, "blind;" it is a game of chan we take, but in this instance our $8000 Alexander Bankrupt Goods Would have Realized us Double If we had wanted it. But our intention is and was to use this stock to advertise our house, give the public the benefit of the profit we should have had and thereby build on another story to the great popularity already ob-
